PBH Residential Care Homes' Mission:

PBH Residential Care Homes provides seniors a modern aging-in-place home with customized, sensible, and safe living quarters where elderly residents can retain their dignity as they move and live comfortably with 24-hour care.

PBH Residential Care Homes' Story:

PBH Residential Care Homes is a family-owned business and company branch of PBH Construction. Certified by The Texas Organization of Residential Care Homes to build and manage a Licensed "B" Small Residential Care Home, PBH Residential Care Homes Co-Owners David and Terri Green, along with their son and seasoned architectural designer, Jeffrey Green, are fulfilling a desire to provide a safe, loving and "current" alternative for area senior citizens who require 24-hour care.

The Greens have updated and renovated homes around the Dallas-Fort Worth Metroplex for many years, using the highest quality design tools and construction materials – all at an affordable rate for both their company and their homes' future residents. In recent years, the Green family has experienced both the benefits and challenges that their aging family and friends have had with choosing the perfect long-term, assisted-living options. And while learning of the varying accommodations, amenities and services that are available, they found that many seniors really desire to live in an updated, bright and open space that fosters more of a "real home" environment. And so, PBH Residential Care Homes was born. The Greens are combining their construction, design and décor expertise to create safe, loving and "current" aging-in-place homes where residents can retain their dignity as they move and live comfortably with 24-hour care.

When deciding where to start with their new endeavor, the Greens knew their overall vision of a PBH Residential Care Home best fit within an existing, well-established neighborhood that is centrally located to senior and community centers, and major area hospitals. This means, the Greens seek out an ideal home within a welcoming neighborhood that can be upgraded and customized to meet the needs of seniors.

The Greens' hope to give their residents a place they will be proud to call "home." And they want to do this by updating the structural look and feel of a home, as well as creating a bright, inviting and family-like environment within the home. The Greens approach each home with the same high-quality standards and visionary design combination they've used for years, with David's vast years of experience in home construction, Jeffrey's pulse on the latest home architecture trends and Terri's natural eye for interior design. In addition, Jeffrey obtained his Certified Aging In Place Specialist credentials through the National Association of Home Builders to better understand and identify senior home essentials.

Combining these talents, credentials and first-hand experience with elderly care, the Greens strive to produce a high-quality, well-manicured and maintained, and fully-licensed aging-in-place home for six "young-at-heart" residents, ranging from very active to mobility-impaired, who need full-time care. Some interior and exterior features that differentiate a PBH Residential Care Home from other senior homes include wider doorways for easier mobility, an open floor plan that fosters a family-type atmosphere, eco-friendly and energy-efficient windows and appliances, and anti-glare flooring that's easier on the eyes. To create a "homey" and inviting environment, the Greens also give proper attention to lighting, color and décor choices that are proven to invoke positive feelings and foster socialization.

PBH Residential Care Homes is opening its first home in July 2011 in Grand Prairie, Texas. Each home is staffed with credentialed caretakers that nurture and assist the residents 24 hours a day, seven days a week.
